

HĚRACHA

Evanescent

SS26

a flower

bloomed

once a year

its white

petals

unfolded

only at night

the moon

illuminated

it softly

the world

held

its breath

it lived

for a single

night

yet in that instant

it revealed

its full

fragile beauty

at dawn

the flower
disappeared

leaving

only the memory

of its glow

Process

flowers
embroidered separately

assembled
into garments

dresses
cut with a knife

fragile
impermanent
beautiful

each piece
a moment
captured
then dissolved

Materials

recycled plastic (threads)

irish linen

deadstock linen

interfacing for embroidery
